Veterans Day Essay

I honor the veterans for protecting our country. I honor them for 3 reasons. #1 my dad saved people who had lost their arms and legs from the war. #2 people protect us and risk their lives for ours. #3, they train all day and work so hard just for random people.

I honor veterans for protecting our country because my dad was one. He saved people who lost their legs and arms in the war. My dad was 19 and a senior in high school when he went to boot camp for the military for 4 years and trained very hard. He was an orthopedic specialist and was stationed at Walter Reed Army medical center in Washington D.C. My dad helped with people who lost their arms and their legs in the war of Desert Storm. Desert Storm was a war that happened in the middle east of Asia. It was very hard for him to help people with missing limbs. He worked very hard to get there and trained very hard, and that's why I honor him.

I honor the veterans for protecting our country because they protect us and risk their lives for us. Some soldiers go to war trying to help their country with families knowing they might not come back just to protect us and our families. That kind of person deserves to be honored and thanked for their acts of braveness and courage. I couldn't be more thankful for those soldiers and what they did and they very much so deserve to be honored.

I honor the veterans for protecting our country because they train all day and work so hard just for random strangers. I can barely do my chores at home for my own parents and soldiers, risk their lives, train all day, and stay away from their families for random strangers. They help protect us and our families when they don't even know us. War is a very scary time full of dangers and battles where I could never be, but the soldiers are there helping us and their country out of the kindness of their hearts and have the bravery and courage to be able to protect their country no matter what it takes.

In conclusion, I honor the veterans for protecting our country because my dad was one, people risk their lives for ours, and the veterans train all day and work hard for random strangers. They deserve to be honored for all they do for us and this country.
