More Information about Testing

Testing for COVID-19

Getting tested for COVID-19 and knowing what to do if you test positive can save lives.

- Anyone with symptoms of COVID infection should get tested.
- Guidance from health care experts suggest you get tested regularly, even without symptoms, if you're living in some of our most populated cities and towns, especially if you live in close proximity to others. Visit ct.gov/prioritytesting.
- You do not need to be experiencing symptoms or have a doctor's order to be tested.
- Children can be tested if a parent/legal guardian is with them to provide consent.
- Test results are usually available within 24-36 hours.

Priority Workforce Testing

As part of the State of Connecticut's testing program, Connecticut's testing partners are providing priority access for childcare and early childhood staff, teachers, and first responders. Priority access is intended for staff who need to get tested quickly, to ensure their workday is not interrupted – but is not intended for the family and friends of said workers.

Here is who qualifies:

Teachers/School Staff (including Bus Drivers) • Early Childhood/Child Care Professionals
Police Officers • Fire Fighters • Paramedics/EMT • National Guard • Dispatchers

COVID-19 Contact Tracing

You should get tested if you have been contacted by a public health professional or contact tracer and told that you have been in contact with a known case of COVID-19. If you test positive, you can expect a call from a contact tracer, and to have a detailed conversation with them about who you have been in contact with. In this way, you can help to save lives and stop the spread of COVID-19. Calls will show up on your phone as CTCOVIDTRACE or may be from your local health department. Your personal health information will be protected in this process. You will not be asked to call a "1-900" number. You will not be contacted via social media or asked for financial information.
